

house an' a garden an' a place for alfalfa an' that alfalfa is for the rabbits, an' I take a sack an' get it all full of alfalfa and then take it to the rabbits" (Steinbeck 89). Lennie's obsession with mice and rabbits represents his ^{yearning} for human warmth (article 2-16). Finding someone to love you fully is hard to do and for Lennie to cope with not having love and affection by George he tried to take it out by having mice, rabbits, and puppies.

Curley's wife has her own problems of loneliness. She has to flaunt herself for all the ^{men} guys to notice her even though ^{she is} she's married. She has to make sure she has satisfaction by having all these ^{men} guys staring at her and wishing to be with her. "coulda been in the movies and had clothes-- an' coulda sat in these big hotels an' had pitchers took of me" (Steinbeck 89). Curley's wife ^{is} was to fixated on the past and she made herself sad ^{and that} and that she was better than everyone and no one was really for her so she flaunted herself so she could make herself feel good and ^{be} ~~like~~ a happier person.

Loneliness helps define who a person ^{is} ~~is~~ as a person. Lennie was all for rabbits mice and puppies, Curley's wife dwelled too much on the past and George and Lennie only had themselves in the world. Being lonely ^{is not} isn't that bad, people just have to find a good way to cope with it ^{and} ~~and~~ ^{not} ~~not~~ make them sad and dwell too much on how sad they are or how lonely they are.
